

Highlights

- Crowdsourced data + time-series features yield robust Tanzanian crop maps
- “Lite” methods may outperform many binary agriculture models in developing regions
- Feature importance analysis reveals key spectral indicators for each crop
- High classification accuracy aids sustainable land management decisions
- Proposed methodology can be best applied in low-resource and data settings